Windows updates can be categorized in two major groups, major and non-major. Major updates are those which cause a shift in the fundamentals of Windows, therefore are very important and should be tested before they are used. Non-major updates are those that fix small errors or provide small features improvements and do not cause fundamental changes to the OS. This is why you have to keep track of Windows updates and make sure you aren't missing anything. So let's see how to do this. First thing you need is an internet connection. You can use Windows Firewall to allow Internet connection in Windows 8 and newer, but you don't want to change the firewall settings. If you don't have a firewall in your computer, then just go ahead and enable an Internet connection. One of the most common uses of a firewall is to prevent Internet access to remote hosts or prevent other applications from connecting to a web server. In both cases, when a program is trying to access the Internet, it is necessary to open a port. Firewall does this for you, so you just need to enable a connection, but you can also disable it to allow everything through. Once your internet connection is enabled, open your browser and type in the address bar. If you have Windows 8 or newer, you can use the search bar to search for updates or click on the

There are many known barriers to a child developing their reading skills. A child may be born with a disability, or may develop a disability later in life. The child may have a learning disability or a specific learning difficulty, or may have dyslexia. In addition to being in the early stages of reading, a child may have problems in language, maths, or all of the above. A number of methods of helping to develop reading skills are known, for example books or e-books, audio-books, lessons on-line or in print, or books with specific tasks. However, these known methods of teaching children to read are often not suitable for very young children, or the children may be unwilling or unable to attend regular lessons or participate in the learning activities. This can result in their not learning to read. An alternative approach to teaching children to read is to use an electronic learning aid, which is used in place of books or regular lessons. Many of the known learning aids work on the principle of kinesthetic learning, which is learning by doing or seeing. Other known learning aids work on the principle of auditory learning, which
