Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical element having optical characteristics that are modifiable through electrical control or the like, such as a variable focus lens. 2. Description of the Related Art An example of an optical element having optical characteristics that are modifiable through electrical control is a variable focus lens. Among various variable focus lenses, a variable focus lens having an inner optical surface that is cylindrical has been proposed and implemented. (See, for example, Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 4-184153.) The variable focus lens described in Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 4-184153 is constructed so as to allow the focal point to be varied by rotating a holder, which holds the lens, about an optical axis. The variable focus lens is used as a part of an optical pickup unit, and is selectively used to vary the focal length in accordance with the distance from the focal point to the recording surface of a disk. For example, if the focal length is long at the outset, it is possible to perform data recording on the disk with good efficiency. In addition, if the focal length is short at the outset, it is possible to record data on a disk with good efficiency. In recent years, the size of optical disks has been reduced in order to meet the requirement for a higher recording density, and their recording surfaces are placed closer to the focal point. Therefore, the distance from the focal point to the recording surface of a disk is shorter. It is desirable that the distance from the focal point to the recording surface is varied in accordance with the distance between the focal point and the recording surface of a disk, so that the use efficiency of the optical pickup can be improved. In addition, with the disk having a reduced size, the thickness of
