The detections works fine, and the graphes is fine, but the other toolbars are not displaying. The Network is working but no data is displayed. I have also tried to do the check-up with the profile and it always returns with the same error: Bad Ping, but the ping tests results are correct. Does anyone knows what the problem is? I have also tried different profiles but still nothing happens. shuabaly A handy tool to monitor the connection. But does not work well on Windows and not an issue of the program. Try a Linux operating system and it works very well. Ricky Rubin Nice tool. Helps a lot in checking connections. Richie R. Excellent! Hans Richter A very nice tool to check the connection speed, but one problem. It appears to work perfectly fine, but it seems to not be stored in the application but on the server side. I downloaded the installer

PingPeng Ping Tool is an advanced ping tool with following features: PingPeng can ping multiple hosts and display the results as graphs. PingPeng can automatically detect connection gaps and displays it's logfiles as graphs on the fly. PingPeng includes a G15 extension which allows you to display PingPeng stats on your G15 keyboard. Features: Check the connections of the hosts you want to ping Ping the hosts one by one, or ping all the hosts in a batch. You can even ping the hosts in a named list (the ping command accepts the names of hosts as an argument). Detect connection gaps, for instance, if you are connected via VPN and switch to the local network, you will lose your connection, PingPeng will detect it and show it's logfile as a graph. View all the PingPeng logfiles in a graph, similar to how Windows display network errors, you can see the current connection status in a graph, and even view the past and the future! Both the logfiles and the graphs can be saved and later imported to your favorite image editor. Modes: Single ping mode G15 mode Single Ping mode: Ping the host you specify in PingPeng. G15 mode: Ping the host you specify in PingPeng and then hit the "P" key to get to a G15 menu. Perform a batch ping of the host you specify in PingPeng. More details: The Host you specify in PingPeng can be one or many hosts. You can ping hosts one by one or as a group. When you ping many hosts, you can specify a file name for each host, like "host1", "host2", "host3", "host4". The logfiles are very detailed, and it includes the following information: If the ping is successful or failed. How many bytes were sent and received. How long was the response. Ping timeout. Last round-trip time. Incoming/Outgoing round-trip time. Ping errors (for instance, connection errors or timeouts). Load average, if applicable. All these logs can be saved to a file and later viewed in an image editor. You can also graph the logs with graphing feature, similar to how Windows display network errors. Note: the graphing feature uses your PC's CPU, so make sure your PC has enough CPU capacity. You can always turn the graphing feature off if you have no use for it. In the batch ping mode, you can also graph the logs that are saved. A batch ping is performed by specifying a file name in the batch ping mode.

System Requirements For PingPeng:

Microphone: On/Off mic or headset mic is recommended Computer Speakers: Optional, but recommended for better sound quality Expensive microphone/speakers can be used If you want to use headphone, you can use this one. (The best way is to use a headset mic for both microphone and speaker. For Skype, there is a built-in voice recorder, but it doesn't allow us to record from microphone so that we need another one.) And here are the sound settings, if you want to record
