And sorry about the Reddit. I've been going to that site all day trying to figure this out. I'm going to figure it out and if you do get the answer, I will tell you. Thanks for the compliment on my blog! It's going to be a while before I am where I want to be, but I appreciate the compliments. I did notice a couple of spelling errors, so I will try to fix them and send you a message. Let me know if it works Answer #1 - it looks like maybe you are using a proxy. What is a proxy? Does your computer allow other computers to connect to it? If yes, then you should either install a flash fixer like FlashAid or MacSoft Flash Player on it, or at least disable the proxy on your computer. Answer #2 - It looks like you are logged in to your router, and not your computer. If you are not connected to the router with a regular ethernet cable, then you should not be logged in. Answer #3 - this is a great idea. Can you post the full url of the page instead of the CNAME Answer #4 - Should be working fine, but these are the same address as we use for your images. If you put the images on a different folder, then we can work on changing the links. Answer
