James, 31, who is serving an 18-month suspended jail sentence for his part in the fraud, told the court how he and Miss Clark started to work together at the job centre in 2001. He said: "We were both on the same phone line and she was working at the job centre in my name. "There was a number of calls when she would say 'Oh I'm ringing from his name'. "She explained to the people on the other end of the line that James was in prison. "I didn't know how to use her credit card or bank accounts." James said the payments for the goods were not paid for from his prison account but they would later be paid for from the sale of a Land Rover he owned. Mr Justice Corlett said: "You became two people. One of which was a convicted felon at a very young age. "You had a very tenuous hold on the reality of the world and it was very hard for you to extricate yourself from it. "You had to have your identity changed so you could carry on. You were almost happy to lose yourself." On the day of the shoplifting James, who was in a relationship with Miss Clark, contacted his mother to say he was in custody but was not making bail. James said: "I didn't want to give her any false hope. I wasn't in touch with her for the first couple of months." On September 11, 2002, James was released from prison and moved in with Miss Clark. Mr Justice Corlett said the couple now had a child together although the child's father was not in their lives. Detective Inspector Mark MacLeod said: "James did it for the c6a93da74d
