Zinc supplementation improves growth, antioxidants, immune status, and clinical diarrhea in primary school children in rural Benin. We evaluated the effect of zinc supplementation on growth, antioxidants, immune status, and clinical diarrhea among primary school children in rural Benin. A cluster-randomized trial was conducted in 205 children (9-11 years old) in rural Africa. They were randomly assigned to the control or zinc-supplemented group; zinc was given as a supplement at 20 mg/day during 24 months. Anthropometric measurements, biochemical parameters, and immune responses (total and isotypes of IgG and IgA) were assessed at the time of enrollment and at 24 months. At 24 months, children in the zinc group had a gain in height z-score (HAZ) of 0.31 (95% confidence interval

0.12-0.49), in weight-for-height z-score (WHZ) of 0.32 (95% confidence interval 0.10-0.53), and in weight-for-age z-score (WAZ) of 0.14 (95% confidence interval 0.02-0.27) when compared with children in the control group. Antioxidants were increased in the zinc group (9.59% of the control group's reduction in plasma total oxidative status; $P \sim r \sim = 0.02$) in each trimester (Fig. 5{ref-type="fig"}).
